MODERN WITCHES

People Who Believe in Them and Fear Their Power.

REJOICING AT A "HEX'S" DEATH

Charms and Terrors of Listening to a "Ghost Teller"-The Wierd Tale of the "Salted Skin."

tral Pennsylvania died an old wom an, the widow of a Pennsylvania Dutch farmer named Freitcher. Her death was the occasion of an all absorbing excitement in the village, not unmixed with relief, for known as a witch, or, to use the Pennsylvania Dutch term, a "hex"—a woman who worked mysterious charms by the aid of little wax figures and nalls, gout's blood,

Modern story tellers, with their sneering scepticism, have almost persuaded us that there is no such thing as witchcraft in this brundram world. Their tales of the unusual-when they indulge in such a childtashion-by which they seek to produce upon us the creeping sensition that was because we know beforehand they lamp. are gother to poke fan at us in the end for having turned pale and trembled, as they threaded we should. Before they have and such is the power of their soulless exsmple that we will laugh at ourselves and avow we never felt an emotion save that of

Fortunately for romance, however, in latter days science has come to her We have no longer a Poe or a Hoffman, but we have a Charcot, a Brown-Sequard, a Dr. Koch, and these practitioners on the border lands of the miraculous have wonderfully revived the force of witchcraft, for if they, grave doctors of medi-cine, shall attempt and do what our fathers believed impossible, why should not we give credence to the mysterious powers over nature claimed by our fathers' fa-

It is delightful to be able nowndays to consider as an actuality the nature and ex-perience of uneducated, or at least ill regulated, minds, without laying one sent made to the stigma of superstition; under the grateful cover of scientific discussion to the people of that part of Connecticut is grateful cover of scientific discussion to the people of that part of Connecticut is the processing of the uniccountable disappearance five years the uniccountable disappearance five years minded. The old savage desire to propitiate evil spirits is latent in most of us, and we In one of the villages of the control of the villages of shead a tremendous void, and we watch with desire, not unmingled with dread, the efforts of these people to light it with their farthing candles.

Some women never feel an itching on the soles of their feet but they know they are going to walk on strange ground; never drop a knife or fork without expecting a visitor of either sex. Most myths, and most of the characters of mythology, arose from the desire of man to read the writing of nature, to understand her symbolism, which he could best do by symbolizing her forces in turn. Did a storm blow down a tree he fancied a spirit in the air, then a spirit in the tree; a war between them, and the result was the overthrow of the Dryads. The mysterious noises of the forest were to him the whisperings of a myriad of spirits to whom he gave form, and whom he feared or loved as they were kind or the reverse. Our forests are no longer primeval except in novels, but their influence upon the mind of man has altered in quantity the mind of man has altered in quantity ty has been more than in kind. To this day, in certain parts of Pennsylvania, the people benefit work.' He remedies the man of the people benefit work.' tain parts of Pennsylvania, the people beneve in a "black man of the woods" imported from the Hariz mountains, and from the same state comes the story of an old laborer who is popularly supposed to be a wizard. It is repeated here to show that superstition dies with difficulty, if at all.

The Pennsylvania wise man met last fail an overladen apple cart drawn by a poor old horse, and he remarked to the farmer, who was on his way to a cider mill, that he would not get there with the load. Sure enough, a little farther on the old horse fell, and was so badly injured that he had to be killed on the spot. Farmers of the neighborhood, called upon to render aid, agreed that the horse had been placed ander the wizard's influence and the color of the remaining time to leave town. He then visited Cincinnation, and, in conjunction with Thompson and Williams, committed a series of robberles of the "strong arm" type, which means the spoliation of the victims by main strength. Williams was recently a drug clerk, and new to the business. He made a full confession, and the whole gang will soon be under lock and key.

THE NURSE FELL TO THE FLOOR.

No sooner was the old woman free from the integument than she disappeared. The child, more curious than frightened, arose and felt the horrible heap. For several nights she witnessed the strange "undress-ing," and then she related it to the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church. He laughed at what he termed a childish dream, and bade her, the next time she saw the empty skin, to salt carefully the whole inside. She followed his advice, and then in fear and trembling awaited the return of the old woman from her Walpurgis ex cursion. The child, who was 12 years old gave afterward her own testimony. Lide" (the woman's name was Miss Lida Armstroug) "came in about morning and began to put it on, but the very first touch hurt her and she screamed. She screamed louder and louder as she kept putting it on, and she ran around the room as if she was burning up. Otherwise how can we account female of the village. As the new nurse for the continued prosperity of the clair-voyants, seventh children, fortune tellers, astrologics, whose advertisements fill col-tumns of the newspapers? Whatever our condition of doubt may be, we all see a tremendous void, and we watch with discussion form at the gate of the house and wend its way up the hill-side to the cemetery. When the vision had a passed away the nurse fell to the floor in an attack of hysteries, which awoke and so alarmed the patient that she died shortly afterward.

The young woman averred that she had seen the old granddame who was regularly in charge of the invalid personally direct-ing the order of the funeral procession, and that before it moved she had taken her seat beside the driver of the hearse. Most of the story of the vision as an idle tale, but not a single family ever again employed the poor old nurse, who, finding her occu-pation gone and herself under suspicion of pation gone and herself under suspicion of being allied with the evil one, grieved her-self to death.

These simple stories, so lightly strung together, are told only as another way of stating the fact that in 1891—the age of stating the fact that in 1891—the age of realism in literature, of latitude in religion—there exists the belief in witchcraft, if not the thing itself. The world grows old, its inhabitants become educated; but with all changes one thing changeth not, the power of the strong mind over the weak. That is modern witchcraft, pure and simple, and when the definition is universally and the strong mind over the weak. simple, and when the definition is universally accepted witcheraft will lose all the horror of its name.
